The business initially opened in Byard Lane in the winter of 2007 and has since featured in a 2013 music video for a song by boyband Union J.

According to Jonathan Felstead, partner at Brik Barbershop, opening up a second site is now essential as they simply cannot accommodate the number of people looking for appointments. He said: "It's great to be as busy as we are, but we currently have to turn customers away because we just don't have the capacity at the moment."

The new unit is situated just two streets away and has been acquired in order to cope with demand and act as an overflow to the existing barbers. Jonathan added: "The second shop will hopefully be up and running in around five weeks' time and should be a hold an additional four seats which will mean we can accommodate an additional 150 customers per week."

Property consultants FHP acted as agents on the deal. Matt Revill, surveyor at FHP said: "Brik's expansion is testament to Nottingham's growing economy and is a great addition to the eclectic mix of shops located in the Flying Horse Walk."

The barbers will open just inside the Flying Horse Walk's St Peters Gate entrance.
